

An Engaging Garden Where Children and Wildlife Thrive

with Lisa Doseff, Author

Follow a set of grandparents who, with the help of their grandchildren, turn their traditional garden into a habitat for wildlife. By incorporating elements that attract insects, birds, and other creatures to the garden, valuable lessons in environmental stewardship are instilled, all while having great fun. Simple, natural play elements are also added, making the garden even more attractive to the children as a place where they can enjoy exploring the nature they've learned to nurture.

Lisa Doseff is the author of the award-winning children's picture book, "Grandma Lisa's Humming, Buzzing, Chirping Garden". A Lancaster NWF Habitat Steward and a former Virginia Master Gardener, she also co-founded a neighborhood garden club that focuses on creating beautiful pollinator gardens using native plants that appeal to both people and wildlife. In her volunteer work, she's helped to install and maintain native plantings at public gardens, schools, and places of worship and has been involved in various children's gardening projects. She hears in her faith a call to be a responsible caretaker of the earth and to inspire others to see the beauty and importance of restoring natural habitat. Above all, she's a grandmother who wants to see that her grandchildren inherit a thriving, ecologically sound world.
